

London based artist accepting award for most metropolitan lifestyle, can't keep legs from twitching after third coffee.

£8 beans on toast where the beans come in a jar and the toast isn't square and doesn't fit on the plate properly. Worth it, though, so that people can look in and see me sat on the knock off model 60, four-legged, Ikea stools and think "that guy's trendy". I can recommend this place later and say "you should deffo get the du pain grillé en haricots."

Metropolitan lifestyle bingo

- Coffee from trendy cafe which has 'character'
- 'Reading' a book on the underground
- Bibimbap
- £5 pint, the pub also does pizza
- Gallery/exhibit opening
- 5min Uber
- Primarily shops groceries at Tesco Express.
- Landlord votes Labour
- Meal deals

Pedagogic muppet Scientist

"Take the vaccine, kids!"

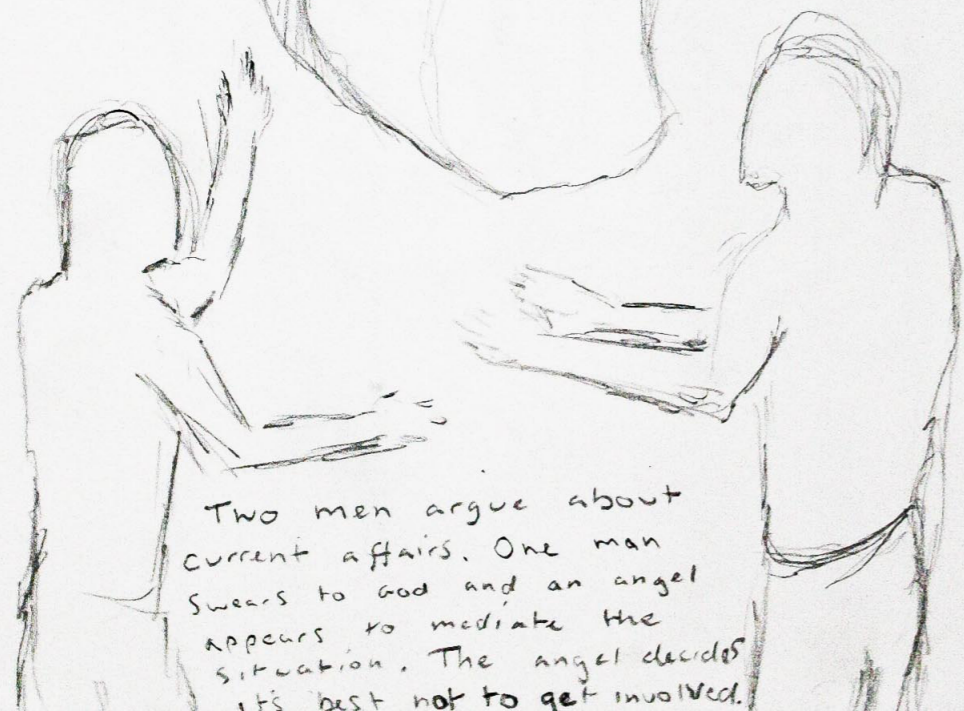

"It looks a bit like Einstein, must be a scientist! Labcoat? Trustworthy source if I ever knew one!"

AN OBJECT TO MAKE THINGS BETTER(?)

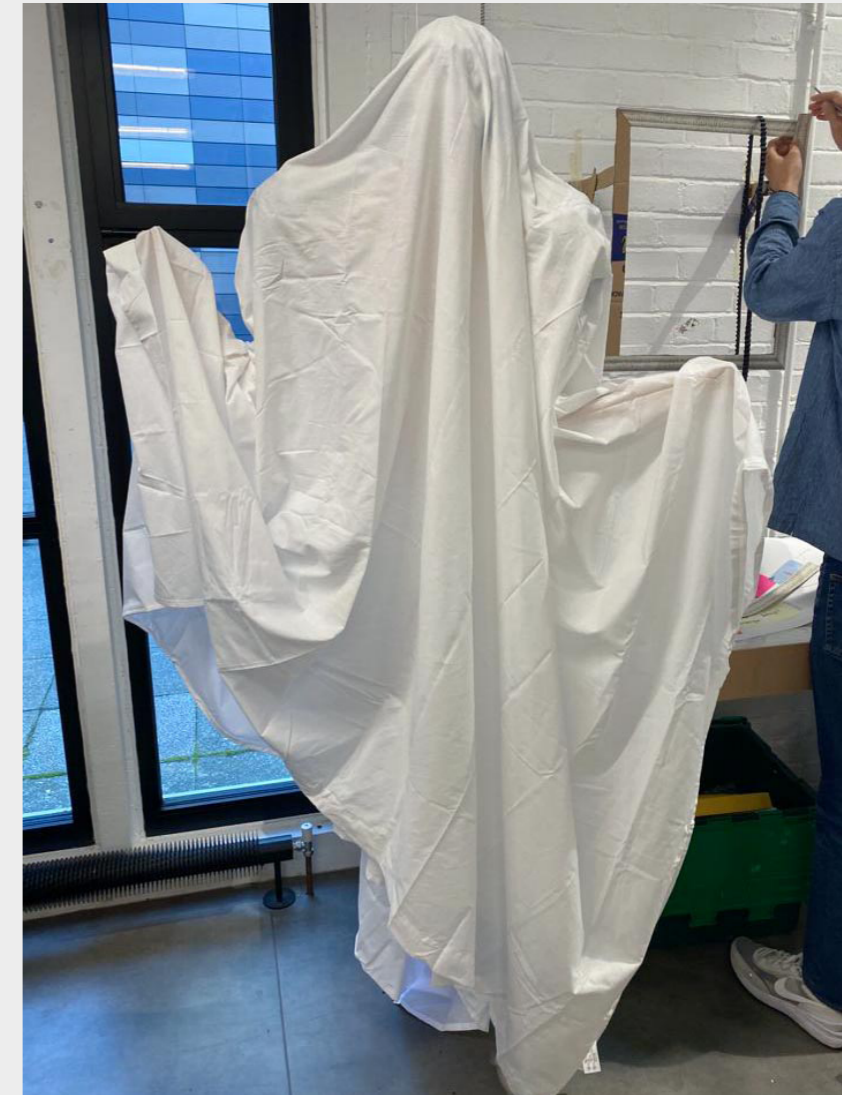

Maybe people take things more seriously when they appear to be spoken out of a sweaty, unwashed, felt creature with an hand shoved up its arse and arms dictated by conductor's sticks.

I remember thinking how stupid these puppets were as a kid. Who thinks this is gonna help me remember shit? How am I meant to take this seriously? Lately, a lot has reminded me of those moments, the ways to counter misinformation and reaffirm scientific authority,

A Spirit, neither here nor there,
Feels neither this way nor that way,
About most things.

Two men argue about current affairs. One man swears to God and an angel appears to mediate the situation. The angel decides it's best not to get involved.

"The affairs of men are of no importance to me as a ghost. My impact on the living concerns me little, as the world it's self no longer has any impact on me."

"Fuck you."

AN OBJECT TO MAKE THINGS WORSE

Imagine a angel comes down from heaven, answering your prayers and adressing the mortal in an effort to intervene in the horrors of current world, and then it doesn't fucking do anything!